Winter Bird Feeding Basics

The weather this fall has been stretching the limits of my patience as an artist. The wind, rain and snow has stymied our efforts to complete the year-end cleanup and organization. No matter how busy we are, we always make time to check on our bird feeders so our feathered friends will not be scrambling to find much needed food on the cold and stormy days ahead.

Winter is a time for repose, relaxation, and many bird feeders take to bird feeding to fill their need for color, texture and interaction with their landscape. If you are an old hand at feeding your winter visitors, or a newbie, these tips from the University of Minnesota Natural Resources will guide you in feeder/feed placement and selection.

There are three main choices in feeding birds: small seeds and suet. Large seeds include black-oil sunflower, striped sunflower, safflower, peanuts, shelled corn, corn and masculine mixes that contain sunflower, safflower and peanuts. Northern cardinals, Blue jays, Black-capped and Chestnut-backed chickadees, House and Purple finches, Evening grosbeaks, Gray and Steller’s jays, nuthatches, crossbills, and titmice all love sunflower seeds.

Peanuts provide a nutritious diet for birds, including Black-capped chickadees, nuthatches, woodpeckers, and Blue jays. Even Northern cardinals will come to a peanut feeder. However, these seeds also attract mammals including squirrels and raccoons. Safflower seeds are not as attractive to these eating machines. Cracked corn and milo are attractive to house sparrows and starlings, which will discourage other birds from visiting your feeders, and are not recommended.

Small seeds include millet and Niger thistle. Millet sprinkled on the ground or in tray, feeders will attract Dark-eyed juncos, Mourning doves, and American tree, Fox, Harris’, White-throated, White-crowned and Golden-crowned sparrows. Niger thistle will bring American and Lesser goldfinches, Common and Hoary redpolls, House and Purple finches, and Pine siskins. Many wintering also birds benefit from suet, suet mixes and peanut butter, including Pileated, red-bellied, red-headed, downy and hairy woodpeckers; chickadees, titmice, and nuthatches.

Water is critical to overwintering birds. Including a heated birdbath in your feeder set up will be an open invitation to a variety of birds. Do not worry about birds freezing if they bathe on a cold winter day. This water is primarily for drinking. Include a variety of feeder types that offer larger seeds, smaller seeds, and suet.

Douglas County Public Works recognized for reducing use of salt by 30%

Experts from across the county presented the latest research and innovations in road salt application and its effects on our lakes, rivers, and streams to more than 250 participants at the 19th Annual Road Salt Symposium in Vadnais Heights, Minn. on October 24. Freshwater and Fortin Consulting have co-hosted the symposium for the past 19 years, this year with assistance from LTAP and many other sponsors. The annual event increases awareness of cutting-edge maintenance techniques for snow and ice management that protect our communities while minimizing the effects of road salt and other winter maintenance practices have on our freshwater resources.

Attendees heard the best ideas for successful snow and ice management from public and private sector peers, sharing technology advancements and trends at both agency and individual levels. Highlights included:

- Pavement forecasting
- Ice breakers
- Direct Liquid Applications
- Success stories
- Training and resource tools for the winter maintenance industry

- Statewide Chloride Management plan
- New clear roads research
- Freshwater also presented Environmental Leadership Awards to the following organizations and individuals who have made diligent efforts to change their winter maintenance practices or educational programs to have less impact on our environment.

- Douglas County Public Works, for reducing salt use by 30 percent during the challenging winter of 2019, by making these changes: calibrated all sanders and installed the latest controllers in new trucks; invested in a brine-making system and brine applications systems; educated its operators and made clear the expectation of reduced salt use.
- Mayo Clinic Grounds Maintenance, along with St. Marys Ground Maintenance and Historic Properties Grounds Maintenance, for reducing salt use by 60% while maintaining safe parking lots and roadways, during winter 2019 where they received a record amount of snow. The Maintenance team accomplished this by calibrating its salt application equipment and incorporating liquids into their practice, along with Smart Salt training.
- City of Edina Engineering Department, for several replicable initiatives that help reduce chloride in waters, including: being the first city to pass a Resolution of Support for limited liability for winter maintenance providers; working with Master Water Stewards to develop a Model Contract for Snow and Ice Management; and helping create a collection of model ordinances for cities and watershed organizations. They also partnered with University of Minnesota researchers to study creative and data-driven methods of adapting practices to reduce salt use.
- MnDOT Road Weather Technology Team, for developing new strategies and techniques that take advantage of evolving snow and ice control technology. One application they have embraced helps operators predict weather and road conditions so they can make better decisions during winter events, with the goal to put down the right material in the right amount at the right time, and in the right place.
